DOMESTIC DRAMA

Taylor. They were having a quiet luncheon with Mrs. Brokaw, who alleges, when her husband rushed in and "raised a terrible fuss." Straightway he telegraphed, as she says, to her mother, Mrs. Blair, that he would seek a separation.

At the High Point, N. C., hunting lodge of the wealthy Brokaw on New Year's Day, 1908, the bride charges that her husband strained the bonds of her patience beyond endurance by accusing her of paying undue attention to some of her guests and particularly "Jimmy" Martin, his own nephew.

There were present on this occasion as witnesses to "the scene" guests including "Lionel" Stevenson and Mrs. White, Justice Gilderbeyer, Mrs. Potter, of Boston; Thomas Sturgis, Samuel Willits, late master of the Meadowbrook Hunt Club, and Mr. and Mrs. Jules S. Backe. Mr. Brokaw even pursued her from one room to the other, she declares, and finally told her to quit the house.

The year that Mr. and Mrs. Brokaw lived together was enlivened by a series of domestic differences that the wife sums up as follows:

"Mr. Brokaw was insanely jealous. He forbade me to dine in the public dining-room at hotels; he subjected me to a system of espionage constantly by his detectives; he accused me unjustly of flirting; he forbade me to go out of the house. He broke into my room late at night to see if I was there; he was intoxicated much of the time; he finally closed the house at Great Neck and took away the furniture and left me without support."

Vigorous Defense.
Brokaw will make a vigorous defense of his wife's suit. She is now getting alimony at the rate of $10,000 a month. In addition to her suit against her husband, she has an action for libel pending against the Western Union Telegraph Company for damages for libel. The specific charge is that the company transmitted her husband's messages reflecting on her character.

Brokaw has made the following denial of his wife's accusations: "Instead of being cruel to her, I have been too kind. The reason I closed the house at Great Neck was because some man, whose name I don't know, was put in my room. When I asked my wife for an explanation she declined to give it."

"The charge of non-support is also unfounded. I am giving my wife a liberal allowance, but I am unwilling to support her whole family. That is the true cause of her suit against me. As for the charge that I ever struck her, that is absolutely false. I never raised my hand against her. I also deny emphatically that I ever broke into her sleeping apartment to see whether she was there."

"My wife was always free to come and go as she pleased. The charge that I forbade her to eat in a public dining-room is absurd on the face of it. Every charge she makes against me is untrue. When she says I swore at her she says what is not so. I never spoke that way to any woman in my life, much less my wife. Her statement that I hired servants to spy on her is on a par with her other charges."

SPIRIT OF BATTLE
PERPADES ENGLAND

posed on bread and meat, and on all the necessities of life of the poor.

"Six hundred irresponsible and hereditary peers claim to decide the taxation of forty millions of people."

The impudence of the attempt of the peers to appeal to the House of Commons is almost sublime. It was their leader, Mr. Balfour, who a year or two ago declared:

"It is the House of Commons and not the House of Lords which settles uncontrolled our financial system; it is the Commons and not the House of Lords which determines by vote whether such or such a minister shall continue to have such a measure of general confidence as may justify the sovereign in further employing him in the House of Commons. No, I desire to see the House of Commons leading in legislative and executive authority."

Oligarchy Doomed.
Small chance indeed will oligarchy have in its aggression when its own leader is on record in condemnation of its attempt to usurp the hitherto uncontrolled authority of the House of Commons over the finances of the country.

I saw to-day an advance proof of the manifesto issued by the national old age pension committee, which is likely to play a deadly part in the coming election. It is a stirring appeal by a non-political body to the electors to vote against the peers in order to secure pensions for aged people. Every vote given for the peers' candidate, it declares, may be proved a vote against the continuance of the old age pensions.

The peers have exposed themselves to this damaging attack by carrying Lord Cromer's amendment decreeing the old age pensions act should end in 1915. The amendment was flung out by the Commons because it conflicted with their privileges, but the fact stands on record—the Lords, by a vote of more than two to one, tried to limit the pensions act to seven years. The inference was a fair one that if the Lords succeed in making good their usurpation, the pensions will go by the board. The fear of such a result, the greatest measure of social reform secured by the peers will paralyze the peers worse than any weapon in the armory of the Commons.

While the various local organizations are busy selecting candidates and preparing for the contests in their respective districts, the leaders of the great parties are carrying on a general campaign. The radicals, who had long foreseen the fate of their finance bill, are not allowing the grass to grow under their feet.

Great Demonstration.

In London this afternoon one of their organizations, the National Democratic League, held a demonstration as a protest against the action of the Lords, which was one of the most notable ever held in the metropolis. Fully 20,000 persons, mostly of the laboring and artisan classes, gathered in Trafalgar Square and cheered the radical speakers, who condemned in unmeasured terms the members of the upper chamber.

The only divergent note here, as elsewhere, came from the suffragists, who, after a term of comparative quiet, again started to indulge in attempts to break up the radical meetings. The Trafalgar Square crowd, however, was too great for their efforts to have any effect. They were more successful at Southport, where by climbing to a roof and shouting through the skylight they succeeded in interrupting Winston Churchill's meeting, and at Leith, where, aided by roughs, they created a diversion by attempting to storm a meeting, which Sir Edward Grey, the foreign secretary, was addressing.

Filled by the Leith police, who charged the crowd with batons, the women got their revenge by hurling bricks through the windows of the public buildings. The police, whose spears were not interrupted to any extent, spoke strongly for the reformation of the upper chamber.

Mr. Churchill was able to conclude his speech and, undaunted by this experience, held a meeting at Liverpool this evening in continuation of his Lancashire campaign.

He ridiculed the idea that the old age pensions and the navy could be paid for by the adoption of tariff reform, and referred to Mr. Balfour's offer to assist cotton growing in the empire as very odd in view of the fact that the Unionists when in power, although asked to do something in this direction, took no action.

The National Council of Free Churches has issued a manifesto calling attention to the action of the House of Lords which, it declares, makes reforms supported by non-conformists impossible, and calls on the people to support the candidates who are favorable to "the emancipation of education from sectarian control."

The Unionists are nominating a candidate in every constituency in England and Scotland, and with the exception of the seats held by the Speaker, the Right Hon. James Williams and Lord Chamberlain, who represents Birmingham, West, either the Liberals or the Laborites will nominate a man to oppose them. The Laborites have decided not to contest Mr. Chamberlain's seat on account of his illness.

Lords Were Armed.

[Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.]
LONDON, December 4.—It has just been learned that the peers have been seriously bloodshed if the crowd outside of the House of Lords Tuesday night had molested its members when leaving after rejecting the budget. Many of the obscure young members of the House of Lords, and some of the older and more distinguished, were "backwoodsmen" applied to them by their opponents, had they been attacked, they were armed with revolvers and left in squads of five or six, determined to shoot if touched.

During the intervals of the hour and an overwhelming force of police, the crowd had dwindled away, so the fire-eating peers slipped into their drawing rooms. Though it is an offense punishable by imprisonment in the Tower to bring weapons into either House of Parliament, these peers had their revolvers with them, and the existence of a scheme of assassination was known to their elders, because a "backwoodsmen" hilarious after dinner, happened to draw his weapon out of his pocket to convince his elderly neighbor that he meant business. If the mob became troublesome, the peers' next best plan was to shoot.

The incident soon got known along the benches, but it was only from the talk of these young bloods at their clubs and in society that their plan of campaign became known.

was left her by her first husband, Giuseppe Lupica, who was shot in a street fight two years ago. From the sale of this house she was reported to have realized $17,000. Mangino, who has been out of work for three months, became involved in an argument over the situation to-day. It was heard by the neighbors, who paid no attention to the matter, however.

Fletcher Sneed, husband of the dead woman, is still alive, regardless of statements to the contrary by Mrs. Sneed's relatives. The same opinion was expressed by Chief Bell. They say that they have no knowledge of Sneed's whereabouts. The Brooklyn police, however, have unearthed evidence leading to the conclusion that Fletcher died in or near the "house of mystery" at Flatlands and was buried in Potter's field.

That Mrs. Wardlaw wept and kissed the lips of the dead Mrs. Sneed on Monday after the body was found was one of the interesting facts told to-day by Dr. M. Herbert Simmons, assistant county physician of Orange, one of the first to arrive at the Jersey cottage after the case was reported to the authorities by Mrs. Wardlaw.

Kissed Dead Woman.
"When she got down on her knees and kissed the dead woman," said Dr. Simmons, "I asked her if she didn't think it was a little late to do that. She said: 'Yes, I guess it is; got to her feet and wiped her tears away.'"

"Mrs. Wardlaw told me that Mrs. Sneed had been taking a bath. I wanted to know how she was going to dry herself, as there wasn't a towel in the house. 'Oh, I guess she would dry herself as best she could,' was her reply."

She said me a string of lies, and I could not gain any definite knowledge from her.

Although the immediate cause of Mrs. Sneed's death was drowning, I thought, because there was no evidence of a struggle, there may have been contributory causes, such as poison. The state of Mrs. Sneed's lungs showed she was drowned. It does not seem probable, although in an emaciated and weak condition, that she would have permitted any one to hold her head under water without making a fight for life.

Investigation disclosed the fact that aged Mrs. Wardlaw has been moved about in a mysterious way by her three black-veiled daughters, and was evidently in a constant state of nervous dread.

Another development of the case to-day was the declaration by agents of the two big insurance companies that they were by no means satisfied that the young woman whose dead body was found in the bathtub of the East Orange house was Mrs. Cecy Sneed, and that detectives were making a special investigation on this line.

Mrs. Mangino's husband and stepfather, who left the house immediately after the tragedy for the southeastern part of town, where his relatives are said to live.

Mrs. Mangino and the three children were horribly beaten and stabbed. In each instance the victim's head was crushed with a heavy iron bar, and the bodies were stabbed again and again. Mangino's share in the tragedy was witnessed from a doorway by Angelle Lupica, four years old, and Mary Titoroff, a neighbor's child, but Jimmie Lupica, the older boy, gave the alarm.

"Mamma's killed and I'm hit!" he cried, running to the street, and then ran back into the house in an effort to save the lives of the other children, but fell dying on the threshold. According to the story credited by the police, Mrs. Mangino had sold the house at 1905 Orange Street, which of the conspiracy there is no doubt but that it preyed on his mind."

The Gilhooleys were married fourteen years ago, and lived together until last Easter. Mr. Gilhooley has been in the employ of Mr. Ryan for twenty years.
